Research Interests

Adolescents' Conscious Choice & Action

- My research centers on understanding and promoting adolescent ownership (i.e. agency) of personal development. Specifically, I am interested in understanding the motivational, cognitive, and behavioral facets of this sense of ownership. I have developed a 9-item global measure of adolescent agency that incorporates these three dimensions.
- This measure demonstrates strong validity and reliability in the first two samples on which it was run – 7th and 8th grade primarily non-White youth in an under-resourced school district. Future research with this measure will include validation in different populations of adolescents, and evaluating if participation in prevention and intervention programming influences adolescents' report of agentic functioning.

Mindfulness Impacts on Experience of Self

- My second area of interest centers on mindfulness, and how changes in mindfulness relate to changes in personal experience of conscious choice and action. I am interested in understanding how changes in mindfulness in parenting and teaching practices relates to changes in adolescents' experiences of personal agency.
